

Pampas is NOT a native

Pampas

Weedy South American pampas is often mistaken for native toe toe, but there are some easy ways to tell them apart.

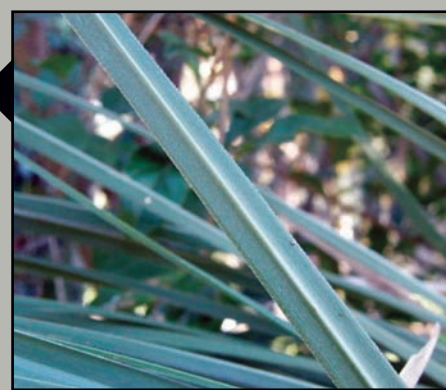

Pampas flower heads are upright, fluffy and white or purple-tinged.

Toe toe flowers are generally droopy, creamy in colour, and less fluffy.

Pampas leaves have a distinct midrib and sharply serrated edges.

Toe toe leaves have secondary veins between the midrib and leaf edge.

Pampas develops a tall, solid base with dead leaves curling like wood shavings.

Toe toe grows from a flat base and dead leaves don't curl.

Help protect our natural environment - replace invasive pampas with native toe toe.

Find out more at:

www.weedbusters.org.nz

WEEDBUSTERS